I am very interested in focusing on the overall well-being of the patient. Each person is an individual, not a diagnosis or disease process, and will be addressed as such. I value working with the patient, family members, and facility staff to offer the best care for each person. I enjoy learning about each patient's journey, their past, and work to honor each individual through their care.

Steven Lawler, MD

I love being a Family Practitioner because I believe that the best care comes from being able to put a person's medical issues in the context of the rest of her life. I spent the first dozen years of my practice providing full-spectrum primary care in a clinic setting, and time and again, my experiences there reinforced the importance of looking at the big picture. For the last few years, I've focused on taking care of seniors in long-term care settings, and I've continued to apply that approach. I try to get to know each of my patients - not only their medical history, but also their hobbies, their career, their family life, their goals and hopes. Each patient is unique and getting to know the whole person helps me provide the best care possible.
